

“Optical spectroscopy is one of the most important and widely used methods in process analytics. Hyperspectral Imaging plays an unexchangeable role in applications where besides quantitative or qualitative chemical analysis or color measurements real-time spatially resolved product quality control is required. In the presentation an overview of the technical challenges and solutions for the different spectral regions starting from the UV to the MIR will be discussed and various corresponding applications presented.”